Task V - Open Task Part

Quantum computing and Quantum Machine Learning are very useful tools for scientific research. They can perform certain tasks orders of magnitude faster than conventional computers. But they currently have no practical use in day-to day computing.

The current big hurdle in quantum computing is the noise problem in NISQ quantum computers. This limits the possible complexity of the quantum circuits.